Synopsis

How would you react if you saw a one-colour person? These are one-colour characters; monochromatic, one single bright colour. Imagine seeing a group of statues or mannequins that come to live... they create maximum interest and excitement. Uncertainty when they are still and surprise when they move. They stand out in the crowd, who feel curiosity and interest towards these observant characters and their unexpected reactions.

Description

"Coloured People" is an itinerant silent show which fills the public's gaze with colors. Each character is monochromatic, made of one single color, who has his or her own identity, presence and personality.

The expectancy created around it is maximum, as well as the uncertainty. This show creates particular situations in which the still characters create uncertainty and when they move the audience reacts with interest. Each artist represents a different type of person: different ages, particular styles, their own job or just performing their feelings at that time. The shocking look and the fact that the eyes are hidden under their glasses help the public not to feel intimidated and causes interest, closeness, participation and, specially relax among the audience. The reaction of the public is sometimes to start narrating what is going on. The characters will hear what they say and, at the same time, the artists will be able to hear everything and interact with their carácter. This shows is about color psychology, with the aim to analyze how we perceive colours and how we react in front of the different colours and what emotions are related to each color. Coloured People is a show which talks about the different reflections of colours in nowadays society.
